Bromeliad Botany Bromeliads (bromelioides) are commonly referred to as bromeliads because of the unusual shape of their leaves, which are usually split into three segments. They are native to the tropics and subtropics. Some species, such as Ipomoea pes-caprae, have flowers that are purple. Species Many species of bromeliad can be found in tropical and subtropical regions, including the United States. The "bromeliad" name is derived from the unusual shapes and divisions of the leaves. The name comes from the Greek word "bromos," meaning "a type of plant that does not grow near water," referring to the fact that the bromeliads live in drier places than do other plants. The
