To create a shared model on the web, users must first create a new model file in AutoCAD 2017 or later. To access a shared model from the web, you must first configure your browser to communicate with AutoCAD through the Web-based Launchpad tool. To do this, you must make sure that you have Internet access and then open the Launchpad from your web browser. The default

Launchpad mode is simple: open the URL `launchpad.acad.com` and wait a moment. The Launchpad URL and web browser address bar will be darkened to indicate a connection. If the `launchpad.acad.com` URL isn't showing in the browser, the Launchpad Web Server is probably offline. If this is the case, you must check your Internet connection and restart your web browser. This paper is concerned with how blue-collar workers experience work in the domestic realm in ways that are fundamentally different from how they experience work in the workplace. My research aims to understand how work in the domestic realm is experienced by blue-collar workers as compared to their white-collar counterparts. I consider this an important dimension of my research since labor market participation can be understood as a microcosm of the broader inter-corporate, inter-professional and inter-industrial divisions and inequalities that characterize contemporary societies. I understand the present form and evolution of domestic work, and of blue-collar work in general, as intimately related to the changing nature of the political economy of social reproduction. I consider political economy to be the study of the relationship between the way that capitalism operates on the one hand and what people experience on the other. I therefore attempt to map out some of the ways in which the interplay between capitalism and social reproduction are manifest in contemporary domestic labor practices.

people and then quickly mark up the markup to ensure consistency across all stakeholders. (video: 4:40 min.) New Markup Assist icons for adding a markup to a model, image, surface, or geometry. (video: 2:05 min.) “Markup Assist” allows you to navigate directly from the 2D canvas to the markup toolbar, and the user interface is now fully customizable. You can personalize your toolbar with a variety of new commands, and you can configure your new toolbar from the menu bar. Marking up geometry for the current layer is more convenient.

You can navigate directly from the 2D canvas to the markup toolbar and navigate with the new ribbon buttons and dialogs. (video: 3:40 min.) AutoCAD Architecture enables you to quickly view information about 3D objects using an interactive balloon. You can also use the new Markup Assist to quickly add a balloon to a drawing. (video: 2:55 min.) The Geometric Modeling Tools: In this release, the Polygon and Surface tools received several major improvements and enhancements. They work faster and are easier to use with additional improvements to the 3D modeling controls. The Polygon tool supports multi-segment editing. You can use a U-turn to adjust the polygon without the need to create a new polygon. (video: 2:45 min.) The Surface tool now displays better results when you select several different surfaces to combine together. It also supports combining multiple surfaces when you use the multi-segment editing functionality of the Polygon tool. (video: 2:20 min.) The AutoCAD Architecture tool now supports both topology and coordinate information. You can now define the thickness of a face and use the edge metric tool to quickly modify the thickness of a face. When you're drawing lines, you can quickly make a series of lines of a certain length. This new functionality provides faster and more flexible line drawing. (video: 1:54 min.) Visual Tools: As you sketch and collaborate, you'll notice changes to the visual tools. The Visual Guides icon is now located next to the line tool in the visual guides toolbar
